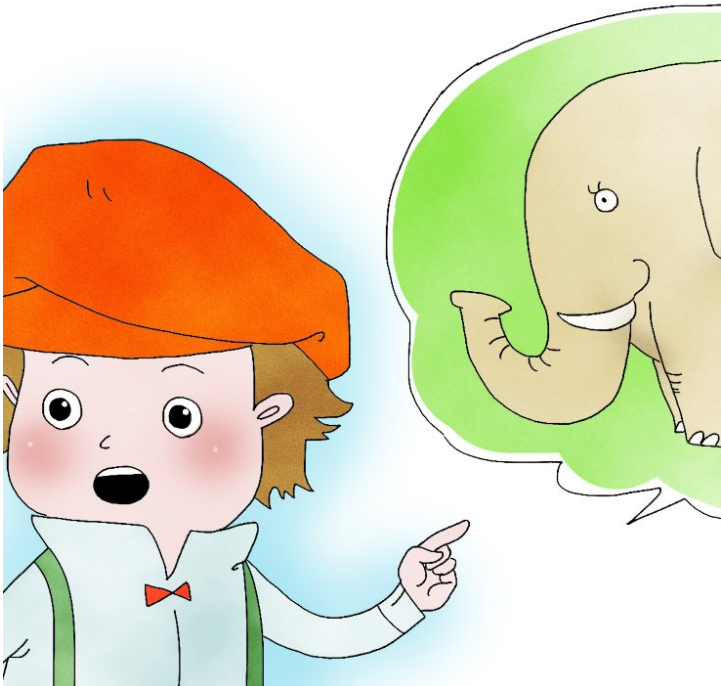
This is Charlie and I talking about how we need to convince our parents to let us share an elephant that will be our friend. But first we figured we should learn all about them.

We brainstormed for hours talking about what we know about elephants. After a while we found out that we know a lot about them, like they have 4 legs, a trunk, 2 tusks, a tail, 2 eyes and a mouth.



Charlie and I went to the circus with a couple of our friends. We noticed that they have a bunch of elephants, some that are adults and some that are babies. We can tell the age of the elephants by the sizes of their tusks.

This is us talking to our families and telling them everything that we know about elephants. We really hope that we can convince them that we can take care of an elephant.

Charlie and I decided that we would take a walk around the back to see if we could find any more elephants. Since the elephants love to eat grass and plants we decided to look near the bushes.

After leaving and walking around back, we noticed a smaller elephant who seemed to be tired from their show. We decided that we would stay around and talk and comfort the elephant to make him feel better. We found some fruit laying around and decided to feed him to see if it would make him better.

The elephant is so happy that we gave him some fruit, he now has so much energy and wants to play with us. We made sure that we were friendly with the elephant and that we did not do anything to harm him because we know that he is the star in the big show.

The circus owner came up to us and noticed that we have been with his elephants, we told him that his elephant is amazing and that we fed him fruit and are keeping him company while he rests. But sadly the owner told us that they are leaving in 20 minutes and never coming back.

After hearing the awful news I knew I had to say my final goodbyes to my new friend. The good things about elephants though is that they have great memory and he will always remember who I am, no matter where we are. Elephant families are very close and to hug and comfort each other, they wrap their trunks around one another. While saying goodbye, he did this and I knew he would miss me.

While leaving the circus we found our parents and we told them all about how we made a new friend with an elephant and that we fed him fruits and we played for a while too right before he had to leave for his next show. Our parents were so happy for us.
